(all messages left on message board are anonymous, and will be sent to the author) on the evidence submitted, and on the arguments of counsel, a finding that an agency is vested with discretion not to act is not the equivalent of a finding that such discretion has been abused in the exercise thereof. (People v. Ray (1889) 127 Ill. 261, 264; La Grange Union Free School Dist. v. Karch (1943) 318 Ill.App. 305, 308; Bank of Commonwealth v. McKinnon (1906) 116 Ill.App. 627, 636-37.) Although the district was denied funds to build the elementary schools, there is no basis to infer that the district's inability to find a property owner or to persuade a property owner to donate land was the result of an abuse of discretion. The district need not receive funds in every situation in which it is legally entitled to receive them. The district's inaction, which has not been shown to be the result of an abuse of discretion, does not demonstrate that the board's decision was arbitrary and capricious. The action of the board is affirmed. Affirmed. HARTMAN and SCOTT, JJ., concur. Near-infrared spectroscopy (NIRS) detection of changes in deoxygenated hemoglobin during motor imagery. Near-infrared spectroscopy (NIRS) was employed to measure the change in oxyhemoglobin and deoxyhemoglobin in the prefrontal region during motor imagery tasks. Six subjects performed simple motor imagery tasks such as a finger-tapping task and a motor imagery of a whole hand-clapping task. The deoxyhemoglobin increase during both the finger-tapping task and hand-clapping task were correlated significantly 82157476af
